Dear Neeraj Kumar Cheryala,

Congratulations!

We would like to take this opportunity to commend you on the successful completion of your project.

This letter certifies that you have completed your internship with IBM India Private Limited. This also confirms your employment in an intern capacity from January 08, 2022 to June 10, 2022 under the guidance of BABITHA M DURGA.

Project title –Unit–level Timing Analysis with Improved Apportioned Assertions

Project Details – Timing analysis is an integral part of ASIC/VLSI design flow. It is the process of adding the cell delays and net delays to obtain the path delays and comparing these to the timing specification. Based on the path delays, the optimization tool chooses the appropriate cells from the timing library to create a circuit that meets the timing requirements and ensures that the circuit works at the specified frequency. IBM has been designing the latest Z processor for its mainframe computers. The chip is composed of multiple ‘units’ where each unit is in turn a combination of several logic modules called as macros as per the module hierarchy of IBM’s processors. In this context, unit–level timing analysis is performed after the macros have been placed and routed wherein timing assertions are primarily used to validate the circuit timing. An assertion is a check embedded in design or bound to a DUT (Device Under Test) during the design process. Appropriate timing assertions have to be provided to the design team or the optimization tool so as to alleviate/eliminate the timing violations that exist in the unit. This project mainly focuses on distributing (apportionment) the mitigation of negative slack among the macros based on the level of optimization in each of the macro designs. The proposed solution calculates the optimal critical path delays in each of the macros using appropriate gate delay metrics such as FOn delay (Fanout of n) to provide timing assertions such that the overall slack of the unit is improved by optimizing the design of the corresponding macros. In addition to analysing macro delays, the solution also checks for the layers of integration of macros. Macro assertions need not be tightened if integration is done on lower layers as it can be promoted to higher layers and with better wire codes.
